

Yahoo!

Contributed by Steven Arness
Sunday, 12 March 2006
Last Updated Sunday, 12 March 2006

Well, after I forget how many years, Yahoo! has deactivated my profiles and groups.

Of course they give the typical answer to why as "may have violated terms of service"

Thats like a cop giving you a ticket because you may have broken the law, Yahoo! refuses to answer my emails with anything other then the constant repetition that my account was deactivated as I "may have violated the terms of service"

Of which I can't see how I violated the terms of service, I keep reading it and there is nothing in there that I was doing that would violate it.

Bet hey, Yahoo! is Yahoo! and seems they can do whatever they want to their members and not suffer for doing so.

If Yahoo! has ever done something goofy to you, I suggest writing a letter to the CEO, Terry Semel, and given him a heads up. I'm not sure if it works yet as I'm still awaiting my reply, but it's worth a shot.

Steven