

Man Dressed as Women

Contributed by Steven Arness
Tuesday, 21 March 2006
Last Updated Tuesday, 21 March 2006

Wee, of course stuff like this always makes it on the news, what else do they have to report on? Perhaps something like people feeding the hungry? Or people donating their time to help others?

Nah, a guy dressed in female clothing in the library is considered lewd behavior and makes it on the news just like all the other males who do nothing more then wearing non-traditional clothing. If they wern't, then it wouldn't be newsworthy, just how many drunk people can they report on in six hours of news in one day anyways?

My bad, I didn't even give you the article yet, http://www.wkyc.com/news/news_article.aspx?storyid=49617&provider=top

They say Samuel McGilton was arrested for lewd behavior, they don't say what he did, supposedly the crossdressing part was secondary in nature and not why he was arrested. The pictures they have from the surveillance camera shows nothing more then him sitting in a chair. I'd really like to understand how they came up with that as being lewd, but as typical with the media, they just tell you what they want to get your attention and don't really give you the rest of the facts.

Honestly he must have been doing something more then their telling or showing as I've been to the library in a skirt and didn't get arrested. Course I was still me and not trying to change my sex. (yes, sex, not gender like the media says since there afraid to use the S word)

Ok, so after I wrote this I found some additional information on what happened.

Lets put it this way, if Mr. McGilton did what he did, he certainly didn't make it look any good for men who want to wear non-traditional clothing when they are out and about. In fact, masterbating in a public area is bad enough, but wearing a wig and a dress? Thanks a lot, course someone like me needn't worry as I'm not about to do either one of them in public!

<http://www.thesmokinggun.com/archive/0320061lady1.html>